ABOUT THIS GUIDE

Aboriginal people seeking health care in Manitoba are faced with many barriers.

While some may be eligible for services through the First Nations and Inuit Health Branch, others may not. Different levels of government provide different services to different people, and this complicated system can be confusing.

Finding the services you need, when you need them, can be a challenge.

The Winnipeg Health Region's Aboriginal Health Programs has created this resource to help. Depending on your status (First Nation, Non-status, Inuit or Métis), different eligibility criteria may apply. To help you determine your eligibility for the services listed, you will find a colour code above each listing, as follows:

First Nation

Non-status

Inuit

Métis

Many of the services listed here may be available through private health insurance plans such as Blue Cross or Great West Life. Plans vary in cost per month and may provide from 80 to 100 per cent of the fee, depending on the type of coverage.

ABOUT THE WINNIPEG HEALTH REGION'S ABORIGINAL HEALTH PROGRAMS

The Winnipeg Health Region's Aboriginal Health Programs (AHP) are committed to improving the health and wellbeing of Aboriginal people in Manitoba. Programs are developed with input from the Aboriginal community and are inclusive of all Aboriginal people living in urban and rural locations throughout Manitoba. Aboriginal Health Programs works as part of a patient's healthcare team.

AHP - Health Services

Language Access

Interpreter Services Aboriginal Interpreters help to ensure communication and understanding between medical staff and patients. Language interpreters are available in Ojibway, Cree, Island Lake dialect and Oji Cree. Interpreters are on site at the Health Sciences Centre and St. Boniface General Hospital. Mobile interpreter/resource workers provide service at the remaining hospitals, Deer Lodge Centre and Riverview Health Centre.

Advocacy

The Aboriginal patient advocate supports Aboriginal patients' interests, needs and rights while in hospital, and addresses complaints affecting Aboriginal patients. The advocate is available for consultation with patients and will provide advice regarding resources or services, to ensure a holistic healing plan.

Discharge Planning and Coordination

Aboriginal patients are often required to travel to Winnipeg to receive health care services. Discharge planners coordinate services for Aboriginal patients returning to rural or remote communities, and are familiar with the complex issues that can arise in discharge planning between regional health authorities and between urban and rural centres.

Spiritual and Cultural Care

Elder or Healer services may be made available for Aboriginal patients who request them as part of their healing plans. The Aboriginal Traditional Wellness Clinic is open two days per month at the Health Sciences Centre.

All services are available free of charge and can be accessed by calling the Aboriginal Health Programs – Health Services central intake line at 940-8880. The central intake line provides assistance for all initial service requests received from hospitals, facilities and community programs.
